

Which jobs should your marketing bring you?

Pick one service. Complete this with the person who answers inquiries and the person who does the work. Use it with your team or any marketing provider.

1. The work

Name the specific service you want more inquiries about.

2. The customer need

What is the customer trying to get done? Avoid diagnosing before an assessment.

3. The service area

List the locations you serve. Note which requests need an exception.

4. Current capacity

What can your team accept, and who checks availability before promising a time?

5. Information needed

What do you need to know to choose the next step? Keep customer details in your CRM.

6. The next step and owner

Callback, assessment or estimate appointment? Which role arranges it?

7. Customer expectations

What can you accurately promise about that step? Include any fee or condition.

8. Needs review

Which requests need an owner to decide before anyone offers a booking?

CHECK THE HANDOFF

Read your answers as the customer, the person handling the inquiry and the person doing the work. Does each person understand the same next step? Try the brief against a few recent inquiries and fill in any missing instruction.

Keep this worksheet whether or not you choose Complete. It is a planning tool, not a promise of lead volume, bookings or revenue.
